63. Varro wrote a Menippean satire called Periplous, of which only five lines survive and no clues as to route taken—except that Var. Men. 416 Astbury contains a reference to 'Dionysius', presumably the tyrant of Syracuse: in hac ciuitate tum regnabat Dionysius, homo garrulus et acer ('at that time the city was ruled by Dionysius, a fierce and wordy man').

Strabo 6.2.3 (armpit), 1.2.12 (elbow), 63.6 (stag's head). 71. Cf.

Abstract

Critical and exegetical notes on Lucilius’ Iter Siculum, frs. 115-118 and 140-141 from the third book of his Satires; remarks on Horace’s imitation of Lucilius in Serm. 1.5 and on the influence of Greek geographical literature.

Keywords

Lucilius; Horace; satire; Greek geography

Full Text:

PDF

DOI: http://dx.doi.org/10.14601/prometheus-16782