This fascinating study explores the ways that people of many different cultures approach death and dying; how they act in the face of death and how they discover meaning through religion, myth, and cultural values. The book samples cultures as diverse as the Australian Aborigines, Hindus, Buddhists, and Christians. The author brings the reader to the present with a chapter on death and dying in contemporary America.

ISBN/ISSN/ISRC